Time	10:30 – 11:15am
Title	Demonstrating impact – what matters most to those approaching end of life and can we measure it?

Dr Fliss Murtagh, FRCP PhD MRCP

Reader and Consultant in Palliative Medicine, Cicely Saunders Institute

Fliss qualified in medicine in the UK in 1986. She worked in General Practice for almost 10 years, and then undertook specialist training in palliative medicine between 2000 and 2004. She went on to undertake a PhD at King's College London, on 'Improving the quality of care of patients with Stage 5 Chronic Kidney Disease' at King's College London. She is now a Reader in Palliative Medicine at King's College London, and works at King's College Hospital as a palliative care consultant.

She is experienced in providing palliative care to a wide range of people with far advanced disease and their families, and has published extensively on palliative and end-of-life care needs, especially of older people and those with advanced kidney disease.

She led analytical modelling work commissioned for the Palliative Care Funding Review, and is currently working on evaluating complexity in palliative care, and mapping needs, service provision, and outcomes. She is co-leading an NIHR funded national research project to take forward recommendations from the Funding Review, and in particular, to validate a case-mix classification for palliative care, and test different models of care.
